Kansas Hecklers Spared

MANHATTAN, Kan., Sept. 27 (AP)—No legal prosecution or university disciplinary action will be taken at this time against those who heckled President Nixon during his Landon Lecture at Kansas State University Sept. 16.

Ron Innes, Riley County prosecutor, said Saturday he thought a public trial would give the hecklers a chance "to portray themselves as martyrs."

A joint statement was issued by Dr. James A. McCain, Kansas State president; Pat Bosco, student body president, and Charles Hal, faculty senate president, saying there wasn't enough evidence for disciplinary action, but the hecklers had been warned about future behavior.

"In behalf of the students, faculty and administration, we commend Kansas State University students for their magnificent response to President Nixon's address and strongly condemn the crude and discourteous behavior of the tiny minority," the statement added.

During Nixon's speech abou 20 students in a balcon shouted obscenities and d played banners.
